Richard Marshall represents financial institutions and executives subject to investigations by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), Department of Justice (DOJ), Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) and state securities regulators. A former senior attorney at the SEC, he also advises financial services clients on regulatory issues.

The insight of a former enforcer

Rick served for several years as a Senior Associate Regional Administrator in the SEC's New York office, where his staff conducted inspections of investment companies and investment advisers, and instituted enforcement actions against those entities. Earlier in his career, Rick served as a Branch Chief in the SEC's Division of Enforcement in Washington, DC. He uses insights from that experience in defending financial services providers and individuals against allegations, including insider trading and violations of the Investment Company and Advisers Act.

As a former senior supervisor of the SEC's inspection program, Rick regularly assists clients in building and implementing compliance systems, defending against regulatory inspections and addressing novel regulatory issues. He also assists clients with internal investigations, self-reports to regulators and applications for interpretive and exemptive relief. He is the founding editor of the Investment Lawyer, a former board member of the National Society of Compliance Professionals and the current chair of that organization's investment adviser committee.

Rick also represents clients in regulatory investigations. He has tried numerous cases, including SEC v. Howard, in which he successfully defended the senior officer of a large broker-dealer, who was vindicated by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals based on reliance on advice of counsel.
